DC can be induced from pluripotent hematopoietic stem cells (HSC) within the bone marrow (BM) by culture with GM-CSF and IL-4. Here we have used the in vitro culture system to demonstrate that immature DC are induced from CD34(+) cells from BM of human hematopoietic chimeras transplanted with human fetal liver. This population of human DC is developmentally regulated during in vitro culture and possesses the properties of the classical dendritic cell. Pseudorecombinant Navanax mosaic virus (NMV) expressing green fluorescent protein (GFP) was used to characterize the movement of virus in Nicotiana benthamiana using vital fluorescent confocal microscopy. The virus was allowed to accumulate for extended periods in local lesions prior to treatment with fungal toxin brefeldin A (BFA) to inhibit the cell-to-cell movement, the application of concanamycin A (CMA) to inhibit virus-localized late endosome/vacuole formation or application of calpeptin (CPP) to inhibit chloroplast alkalization and lysosomal acidification. These treatments resulted in extensive tissue damage when applied at 15 h post-inoculation (p.i.) but reduced the mobility of the virus when applied 2-3 days p.i. However, a full range of pressures was applied to avoid over-extension of the movement assay with application of a conservative pressure of 0.75 MPa. The use of pharmacological treatments to reduce cell-to-cell movement of a complex virus in a complex host such as N. benthamiana offers the potential to determine the minimum number of cells required for a full range of virus movement in a host cell population.
