I've tried to help a few times in the mod queue, for a question that has been closed and flagged. I would like to do this, because every question I come across has a lot of downvotes in it. I come here, I try to help, but I feel that there are enough people that can do this better than I can, without having to find a way around the downvotes. Can you just ban someone from asking for help in the mod queue? I'm not saying that I have time to help everyone I see, but if I see a couple questions that need to be looked at, and if I can spare the time from doing my own work, I would like to help. A: I like the idea, it would certainly be fair to do so if they just didn't bother to respond to your request for help Is there any way to stop them from asking for help in the mod queue? Right now the only way to actually stop people from asking for help in the mod queue is to downvote the question (which is also the only way to stop them from asking for help on any SE site). I really don't like the idea of that though since it prevents people from having a chance to improve their question in general. I'd say just flag and let a moderator know about it, 3e33713323
