The thing is that they all have the same functionality, they only differ in style and content. What I mean is that in each of the divs, there's an input that needs to be filled out and then there's a button that should execute a function when clicked. So is there a way for me to bind the same JQuery to a bunch of different divs? Or should I just create JQuery functions for each div and then call them with the IDs of the divs? A: There is no reason why you can't do both. You could have the same function, but with different settings. $(function() { $("#div1").click(function() {
