What's New In Adobe Photoshop CC 2018?

Dear Editor: The global coronavirus disease 2019 (COVID-19) pandemic has been unfolding at an unprecedented pace, with significant morbidity and mortality, as well as large numbers of cases around the world. On 2 March 2020, the World Health Organization declared that the pandemic was a public health emergency of international concern.[@bib1] On 14 March 2020, the WHO declared COVID-19 a pandemic, and on 31 March 2020, the WHO announced that coronavirus disease 2019 (COVID-19) can cause systemic injury resulting in severe damage to multiple organs. Therefore, this dramatic outbreak affects multiple systems in addition to respiratory system. Tumour imaging plays an important role in managing patients with malignant disease, with the aim of screening and diagnosis, staging, follow-up or monitoring treatment responses. However, radiation exposure can increase the risk of cancer and some clinicians would be reluctant to delay or cancel oncological procedures, and especially biopsies, such as fine needle aspiration and core biopsies. On the other hand, it could be harmful to delay evaluation of non-malignant lesions if needed to provide adequate care to patients. Up to now, management strategies for lung cancer during the COVID-19 pandemic are still not well established. In COVID-19, there was a general agreement to adopt high-risk, contact and household precautions. On the other hand, to avoid contact with infected patients, we could adopt a strict on-call policy or stagger-call system for the first four weeks of the pandemic, and we could reduce hospital admission and outpatient service as much as possible. However, despite the adoption of the high-risk precautions, the negative rate of COVID-19 in various studies was higher than 40%, which was about the same as the prevalence of SARS-CoV-2 infection.[@bib2]^,^[@bib3] Many authors have suggested that the practice of delaying or cancelling procedures was associated with the increase of in-hospital COVID-19 cases. For this reason, the reports from China, Italy, and several other countries have been recommending continuation of non-urgent or elective procedures to avoid the increase of patients' number of COVID-19 cases.[@bib4] Considering the number of cancer patients and related urgent or high-risk procedures, we need to find a balance between the management of cancer and the prevention of COVID-19.
