Neon Blight is an upcoming, dark, psychological, pixel horror game created by Ashv Games. We aim to create a rich atmosphere with various aesthetics, twists, and elements that will haunt you for hours. The game features a grisly world full of sinister creatures, engulfing sunlight, and a haunting soundtrack that will leave you cold to the bones. The story of Neon Blight is set in a post-apocalyptic world. You play the game as a character with a machine gun, tasked with killing twisted creatures from beyond time. The world is full of animated animations and objects that seem to move, all in an attempt to provide you with an immersive experience. A big influence on the game was the movie "Arrival" which depicts a parallel dimension, and explores a possible sci-fi premise. We are currently working on a fully functional pixel art and ambient soundtrack. A good chunk of the programming is done, but there is still much left to be done. So we want to be able to try out the game first before finalizing it. We will be releasing a playable alpha version at a later stage, although it will still be incomplete. You will need to wait before you get to play the final version, but we hope you'll like the progress we've made so far. Thank You For Your Kind Words! We would like to thank all of our backers and listeners who have reached out to us with their thoughts. We truly appreciate your encouragement and positive feedback. If you would like to become a backer or make a donation, you can do it here! Become a Backer Your pledge helps us build the game further and makes it available to a wider audience. Here are just some of the features we want to add to the game with your help: - Mellow Ambience, binaural audio - Completion and testing - Add more graphics, gameplay, and audio - Post-release patches and bugfixes - Your name in-game - World building - Music - More things to shoot Become a Patron Your patronage helps us fund our work and keep the dream alive. This game is the biggest tank simulation in the 3D era. You are a tank captain in World War II. Your tank is called Tiger I and you have to complete all tasks in 3 different scenarios. A lively story with individual characters, unique missions and for the first time in a tank simulation a comprehensive weapon system at your disposal. Three different types of missions: Scenario 1: The user of the tank is no longer the driver. He must defend a strategically vital location from the enemy. Scenario 2: The player controls the tank and he has to reach a certain point. In addition to tactical decision making the user has to drive skillfully. Scenario 3: The player is the commander of the tank. He has to lead his troops to victory in a conflict. There is not only the necessity to control the tanks, but the user has to pay attention to the patrol and to the firepower of his own soldiers. Three campaigns to complete In your tank you get different types of weapons. Automatic cannons, machine guns, anti-tank weapons such as the 76mm cannons or the anti-aircraft weapons as well as a flamethrower for short distances. Complete missions On the journey from map to map you will unlock new weapons for your tank. Furthermore you will acquire some additional abilities such as camouflage or the ability to repair your tank. Different tank models Different tank models will allow you to have a very different experience. If you want to get a feeling of the Tiger I, the Sherman Firefly is better for the player who wants to use the dominating and destructive 88 mm gun and if you're aiming for a more casual experience the Sherman Patton III is more suitable. The tank's terrain deformation will be a useful but not essential feature of the game. The heaps of red zones are the obstacles in the terrain and they can differ in size. The size of the zone depends on the situation and the danger of the situation. The tank can be operated virtually free and it is possible to move left and right, up and down. Collisions and other artificial obstacles will occur and will hinder your way. High-resolution 3D graphics with DVD quality No complicated controls to master Various game features - including news, forum, statistics and settings High addictive factor Training features: The controls are easy to learn and intuitive. The camera, which will be controlled by the tank controller, moves automatically. Always in the correct range view. Aut c9d1549cdd

The recent increase in the incidence of multiple sclerosis in Denmark was analyzed to study any possible effect of the increase in the proportion of persons with a non-Danish citizenship (19.2% in 1976, 30.5% in 1987). The incidence rate of definite or probable multiple sclerosis was not found to have increased significantly and there was no difference in the male:female ratio (2.3:1) or in the age at diagnosis (median 41). The effect size among animal studies was considerable (≥ 0.5) in 11 of the 15 animal studies. However, effect size among human studies ranged from 0.1 to 0.5, which was small. Overall, the meta-analysis of this review indicates that the association between stress and cognition in older adults is a moderate association. Conclusions ----- The results of this review indicate that the strength of the association between stress and cognitive functioning in older adults is small, and that overall there is a weak association between stress and cognitive functioning. In addition, the results indicated that the association between stress and cognition is stronger among older individuals with a higher level of depressive symptoms, and that stress interacts with the association between depressive symptoms and cognition. Future studies should investigate the impact of stress on cognitive functioning and other health outcomes in older adults with varying levels of depressive symptoms. game for VR Advertisement ---Update: Added a Top 10 Speedrun on Steam with commentary at the end--- Developer's Introduction: It's been quite a while since I have worked on a game on such a large scale so I thought I might write a dev's perspective on working on games. I expect some of my points to be wrong, so feel free to discuss them here. I would like to thank all the people who have been supporting this game on Early Access, it wouldn't be possible without you. I will probably break up this answer with a few other posts, people have gotten really excited about CricVRX from this post so I expect some more! Note that I am posting from reddit, so this is a bit shortened - Its basically just a very long text and 2 gifs Class of problems Firstly a game like CricVRX is a class of problems all together. I'll go over some of these problems and give an overview of how we attempted to solve them. Building a physics engine for VR First and foremost I need to thank my colleague and friend Anton Besselink for putting together the VR models and 3D objects. I ended up building out the model and code for t he most complex arena. I am a huge Spatial sensei fan and had a very difficult time trying to incorporate this into CricVRX. In a game on a headset it's extremely important that a player wants to look around, which in a VR game can involve changing how you look at the player. With that in mind, this is where I started having trouble. I tried shifting the majority of VR sensei and platforms into 3D, but that made the game overall a lot more complex, so I decided to convert a mix of 2D and 3D models to VR. I'm not sure whether or not this was right. I could be completely wrong and my failings in my physics engine actually offset the awesomeness of Anton. The problem I kept coming across from Spatial sensei was that when a player looks at a player prop you have to update that movement accordingly - this could be for the player prop itself, or the player itself. When I attempted this in CricVRX I realized that if the player is moving the player would fall or be kicked, so I had to completely rethink player movement and propulsion and implement a solver engine which optimizes your movement based on a

-Create incredible clay creatures. -Mould your own action figures. -A rich story of mystery and secrets. -Endless hours of gameplay. -Choose from 16 unique and dynamic characters. -Explore a fully-featured world. -Over 20 recipes to concoct in endless combinations. All reviews are from Indie DB Pay what you want or subscribe for special offers for additional money - whatever you prefer. 12/10 | "I am so over this. I am a big believer of PAY WHAT YOU WANT. Buy a game you love or hate... and do so, even if you only plan to check it out at the start of the year. I don't care if you buy it for $1, as long as you buy it and play it. If it only has 10 to 15 hours of gameplay then that's still spending $8 to $15 on a game you're not sold on. The markdown price is awesome. And you can play it for $1 and either get 100% satisfaction or continue playing and earning that satisfaction over the coming year as you really get into the game. The game may well be short but it delivers a tale of mystery and magic that keeps you turning the pages to see what happens next and it will leave you wanting more. Keep an eye out for the rest of the series that will be coming soon." 9/10 | "The app itself is just about as bad as ever, with a huge raft of bugs about that seem to come and go, glitchy parts and things being permanently missing like out of the box. The game itself, however, is rock solid, fully playable and fun. The story, while it has lots of touches of comedy, it also has a deeper and darker side. The developers have tried a lot of ways to do a game based on a fable of the golem - and it works really well, creating an interesting world with an affecting story." 7/10 | "Golem is full of charm and imagination. The characters are cute and their interactions are fun, but I was beginning to tire of their little routines. I'd prefer more variation on the game's plot." 4/10 | "If a single dollar can buy you a game of this quality and value, then all I can say is you've got yourself one heck of a bargain. The game is filled with humor and music and visuals reminiscent of older PC games." 1/
