When we began working on the project, we weren't sure whether anyone would take it seriously. As the technology has advanced, we've received a lot of support from public officials and we've got a lot of momentum now. The next step is to get the vehicles on the roads as soon as possible. We are one of a few teams working on the technology around the world. We're hoping to launch in Brazil during the second half of this year. TechCrunch: So we're hearing you're working on one of the autonomous-car technologies you talked about, what's the latest? Sam Abuelsamid:We're trying to build what you would traditionally call a

Level 4 vehicle. That is a fully autonomous vehicle that can drive in all the conditions it needs to. But if it can't safely do that, it can automatically override those conditions to stay within the technical limits that we've agreed upon. But we're not talking about a Smart Car. This is a very different machine. One of the things we've learned is that putting a car on the road is a lot more complex than people anticipated. You have to worry about car crashes, you have to worry about highway roads and traffic, but you also have to worry about all the people who walk or bike or ride on the street. And then you've got to worry about your own vehicle, which means that it's also a lot more complex than people imagined. The reason why we're working on this is because we can't wait for everyone else. We need to start now if we're going to start to see this happen. We need it to happen
