The emerging role of endoscopic therapies for gastric intestinal metaplasia. Gastric Intestinal Metaplasia (GIM) is considered to be one of the earliest precursors of Gastric Adenocarcinoma. The GIM is usually present throughout life but is most commonly detected in patients over the age of 50. It is generally asymptomatic and thus it is generally not a concern of the general gastroenterologist. However, when coupled with Helicobacter pylori infection, it can lead to the development of Gastric Adenocarcinoma. Although endoscopic therapies for GIM have been used in the past, they did not produce satisfactory results. However, recent studies have demonstrated that Resilient Contact Precise Thermal Ablation (RC-PTTA), when used in conjunction with the biopsy of GIM, can produce excellent results.

This article highlights the current knowledge on GIM, including its description and prevalence, and discusses the management of GIM with endoscopic therapy.
