The therapeutic efficacy of cimaterol given with broiler starter diets on performance, body weight gain, feed conversion, and mortality of broiler chickens was evaluated. This study was conducted as two experiments on 7- and 12-day-old chicks using a completely randomized design with treatments containing 0 or 1.0 mg of cimaterol per kilogram of diet. A protective effect was observed in both experiments, manifested by slower growth in the groups receiving cimaterol. A beneficial effect of cimaterol on feed conversion in the initial period of growth was shown in the 7-day-old chicks, but, in the group receiving 1.0 mg of cimaterol/kg of diet, feed conversion was more affected by cimaterol than in the group given 0.4 mg of cimaterol/kg of diet. In the 12-day-old chicks cimaterol administration had no effect on body weight gain or feed conversion; however, the mortality rate of this group was higher than that of the two controls, with a significant difference between cimaterol administration (1.0 mg/kg of diet) and the control group (0 mg/kg of diet). By 60 days of age the differences in body weight, feed conversion, and mortality were no longer apparent. Pharmacokinetic studies on the serum and muscle showed that cimaterol was rapidly distributed and had a short serum elimination half-
