I am trying to understand the basic concept of why a stat would be better/worse/necessary to play. Why does a stat like Int or STA say they impact gameplay? The only thing I can guess is that it's because of the other stats, but I don't quite get it. A. To play at the highest level you need all those stats to be high. If your other stats are pretty high, all stats added in buffing are added in the same % of damage, etc. The stats buffing also scale with the other stats, so they can only be added in an amount that won't make your game unfair. For example, if say you have Int of 1000, Defense of 1000 and STR of 200. If a stat buff has only +25 INT, your INT is increased +25%. Since your other stats increased as well they still have more damage potential. Your dps will increase based on all other stats. If buff has only +25 INT, your INT is increased +25%, your Defense will increase +25%, your STR will increase +25% and your SPD will increase +25%. Now you are not taking advantage of the INT bonus, but still your other stats increased based on that. If a stat buff adds several INT points, your INT will be increased more, but your other stats will be added like before in a lower %. If you have an STR buff of 100%, it means that you will only have +100 of STR. Your STR will be added in +100% percent of all other stats, so your defense will increase +100% and your SPD will increase +100%. You will have quite a large STR buff, but you will benefit from that in all stats except for your INT. If a buff adds several INT points, your INT will be increased more, but your other stats will be added like said before in a lower %. If you have an STR buff of 100%.
